THE CORRIE SEAL AND HIS BIG ADVENTURES

Once upon a time in the village of Corrie, a man named Marvin had a brilliant idea. He and his wife Marion ran the local shop (where Mara Fish Bar is now), and Marvin thought: "What if we had a seal on the beach to make people stop and smile?"

So he carved a wooden seal and popped it on a big rock by the sea. People loved it! Tourists snapped photos and some even thought it was real – though it didn't move much!

The seal sat happily for years... until one stormy night – WHOOSH! – off it went into the sea! It washed up in a garden in Turnberry and was brought back to Corrie. But not for long – it soon disappeared again, off on a secret seal mission.

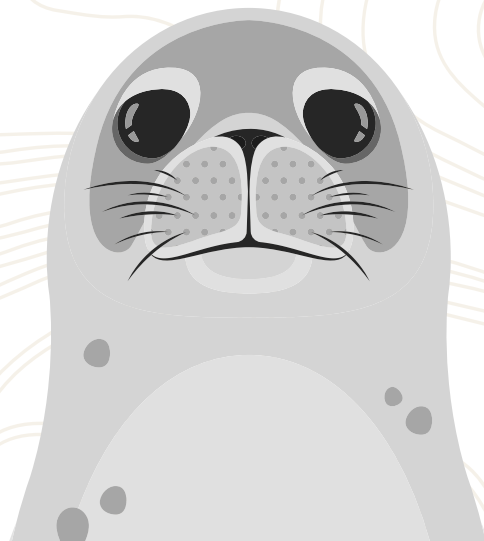

No worries – Marvin made another! This one was named Clyde and he quickly became Corrie's most famous seal. He showed up in photos, leaflets and made everyone smile. But Clyde also had itchy flippers. In 2024, another storm swept him away! A family on holiday spotted him on the Isle of Bute and Rodger from the Corrie Hotel zoomed off with a wheelbarrow to bring him home (after a surprise sleepover on the mainland!).

After all those adventures, Clyde needed a rest. That's when Robert, a sculptor from High Corrie (and Marvin's old apprentice), decided to make a brand-new seal from a huge granite rock he found in his garden.

It took months of carving (and lots of midges), but at last Rocky Clyde was ready! He was revealed at Corrie Capers in 2024 and now sits proudly on the same beach rock.

Made of stone and full of charm, Rocky Clyde isn't going anywhere – he's here to stay, watching over Corrie with a big, rocky grin.

And the original Clyde? He's happily retired in the Corrie Hotel porch. Have you said hello yet? He's always happy to see friendly faces!
